

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of encrypting binary-coded data using block encryption and a private key is characterized by generating from the key a cipher that changes block-by-block. A hardware implementation has a cipher-generating stage and a cipher-applying stage. The cipher-applying stage uses logic circuitry that performs the encryption with only simple switching operations of AND, XOR and OR, allowing very high speed performance.

430151.401/428619_1.DOC